

Among the Mormons

A Survey of Current Literature

Edited by Ralph W. Hansen

*Far must thy researches go
Wouldst thou learn thy world to know;
Thou must tempt the dark abyss
Wouldst thou prove what Being is;
Naught but firmness gains the prize,
Naught but fullness makes us wise,
Buried deep truth ever lies.
Schiller, PROVERBS OF CONFUCIUS.
(Bowring, tr.)*

It is no secret that this editor has had ambivalent feelings toward the Church Historian's Office in Salt Lake City because of the past inaccessibility of the Church Archives to scholars. Now that there is a change in practice, it is distressing to report that the author of a potentially important Mormon work has failed to adequately use the archives. Chad Flake, Special Collections Librarian at Brigham Young University's Clark Library, criticizes Stanley P. Hershson's book on Brigham Young on the basis of the sources Hershson used or failed to use.

SOURCE REVIEW OF STANLEY P. HIRSHSON'S LION OF THE LORD

Chad J. Flake

Several years ago when I first heard that someone was doing research on the life of Brigham Young I was most elated, and somewhat envious. Of all the nineteenth-century Mormon leaders, he seemed to me the one of whom the best biography could be written. Possibilities for biographies of earlier leaders of the Mormon movement were limited by a lack of source material, and of the leaders of the Utah period, Brigham was certainly the most colorful. Moreover there was a wealth of source material on him. Regretfully, it is clear in Lion of the Lord that Stanley P. Hershson does not understand the nineteenth-century Mormon movement or Brigham Young.

Lion of the Lord has a massive bibliography, but primary source material is notably absent from it. In his preface Mr. Hershson states that he received no encouragement from the L.D.S. Church Historian's Office, and after consulting several Mormon scholars — who he does not name — he determined that there was nothing in the Historian's Office which couldn't be found elsewhere. I am aware of a few facts that have a bearing on this statement. Although Mr. Hirshson came to the Church Historian's Office without attempting to correspond with officials there, he was admitted as a reader, as the mention of the Journal History of the Church in his bibliography attests. Mr. Hirshson may have felt no encouragement from the Historians's Office but at least four other non-Mormon scholars were doing research there at the time, two of whom were working on Brigham Young manuscripts. Mr. Hirshson spent half of one day in the Church Historian's Archives.

The massive collection of documents in the Library-Archives of the Church Historian's Office includes Brigham Young's manuscript history, his letter-press book, and his personal diaries, as well as manuscripts of other Mormon leaders, which would enrich any book on the Brigham Young period. Mr. Hirshson's short stay precluded even a thorough investigation of the Journal History, which, as I have mentioned, he includes in his bibliography. One non-Mormon scholar who has been using the Brigham Young material, informs me that he has been working in these materials for two years and feels that it would take another eight years to do them justice. From my own observations, this is not an exaggeration. I strongly suspect that Mr. Hirshson came west only to enhance his bibliography, never intending to go through this voluminous amount of source material.

Mr. Hirshson also ignored some other vital collections. The Henry E. Huntington Library in San Marino, California, which is probably the best library on Utah history outside the state, was never visited by Mr. Hirshson. Nor was the library at the University of Utah, which has many vital manuscripts, including those of George A. Smith, Brigham Young's confidant in later years. The library at Brigham Young University, which has a large diary collection and which now has the Brigham Young account books was also overlooked. The account books were not in the library when Mr. Hirshson made his visit to Utah, but certainly he would have been apprised of them had he done any work at that institution.

The author made another serious mistake in his seemingly unqualified acceptance of the newspaper articles from the New York Public Library. These articles are important, but they are important more for their distortion than for their accuracy. They show what was written in the East concerning Mormonism. Mr. Hirshson's statement that the authors of these articles were qualified journalists, is intriguing. The journalists were generally anonymous, and Mr. Hirshson makes little attempt to identify them. Had he done so he would have found that they were such men as Jesse Gove, using the pseudonym "Argus," and Randolph Marchy, a trooper in the Dragoons, men who both wrote for the anti-Mormon New York Herald. The articles are a curious mixture of truths, half-truths, and fantasy. To cite only one example: had Hirshson bothered to check at the Church Historian's Office, instead of relying on the anonymous correspondent for the New York Times, he would have found that Heber C. Kimball was quite literate, as an examination of his journal would attest.

I cannot close without commenting on Chapter Ten, entitled, "The Wives of Brigham Young." On examination, one finds that most names on the list come from the late Stanley Ivins and the rest from "reliable" Eastern newspaper correspondents. Mr. Ivins didn't write for publication, he was not interested in verification, and he collected his information — a word here, a sentence there — from many sources. Mr. Hirshson accepts Ivins' list of the wives of Brigham Young without substantiating it.

The misfortune of Lion of the Lord is not only its mediocrity but its appearance of legitimacy. The uninformed reader may consider it to be definitive, but such a consideration would be outlandish. It reminds one rather of M.H.A. Van Der Valk's De Profeet der Mormonism, Joseph Smith, Jr. which, though it has almost 1,000 bibliographic notations, adds nothing to the literature of the field.

POTPOURRI

It has come to our attention that Dr. Davis Bitton of the History Department at the University of Utah is compiling a checklist of Utah diaries — a most worthwhile project. The public can assist Dr. Bitton by reporting the whereabouts of such material. The Church Historian's Office or the libraries of Utah universities are prepared to microfilm diaries of historical interest. Such diaries are, of course, welcomed as gifts.

The Honor's Program at B.Y.U. has recently published Tangents I. According to the preface, Tangents I was conceived to give honor students and University scholars a place to publish undergraduate work or independent study projects. Of the eight articles in this issue, two are of interest to students of Mormon Americana. They are Howard D. Palmer's "Mormon Political Behavior in Alberta" and Terrell Hunt's "The Economics of Theocracy: The Mormon Liquidity Crisis, 1847-1860."

The bibliographical listing which follows includes books and pamphlets, most of which were published in 1969. Current theses and dissertations will be listed in the next issue, and a list of articles from periodicals will follow in the last issue of the volume. The reader will note a substantial number of works printed by J. Grant Stevenson of Provo, Utah. Brother Stevenson has published many family histories, genealogies, and ward histories, and a few community histories as well. Previously we have not included these works here because they are printed in such small lots that they are not generally available. However, this type of publication is relevant "Among the Mormons" and does not need justification for inclusion.
