POLLY AIRD {pollyaird@earthlink.net} is an independent historian living in Seattle, Washington. She is the author of Mormon Convert, Mormon Defector: A Scottish Immigrant in the American West, 1848–1861 (Norman: Arthur H. Clark Co., an imprint of the University of Oklahoma Press, 2009).

DAVID H. BAILEY {david@dhbailey.com} is the Chief Technologist of the Computational Research Department of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory and the editor of the website http://www.sciencemeetsreligion.org. ACKNOWLEDGMENTS: I recognize with appreciation the contributions and suggestions of Duane Jeffrey, Kenneth Miller, Steven Peck, and several other friends, relatives, and colleagues.

SHAWN P. BAILEY {shawnpbailey@gmail.com} is a lawyer in Logan, Utah. He writes late at night when the children are in bed and his wife, Andrea, is at the piano perfecting a number by Schumann or Schubert. Shawn’s stories and poetry have appeared in Dialogue, Irreantum, BYU Studies, and Popcorn Popping. Shawn also blogs on Mormon arts and culture at motleyvision.org.

DANA HAIGHT CATTANI {dana_cattani@sbcglobal.net} is the author, with Angela B. Haight, of A. P. Giannini: The Man with the Midas Touch (Bloomington, Ind.: AuthorHouse, 2009). Dana holds a doctorate in education from Stanford University and has spent more than twenty years working or volunteering in schools in California, North Carolina, and Indiana. As the writing mother of three, she listens for (and loves) the sound of the school bus, both coming and going. Currently, she serves as the women’s pick-up basketball coordinator in her ward.

TONY CLARK {clarkto@friends.edu} is an associate professor at Friends University, Wichita, Kansas.

SIMON PETER EGGERTSEN {speggertsen@yahoo.com} was born in Kansas, raised in Utah, and educated in Virginia and England. He has degrees in literature, language, and law. He now lives in Montreal. “Things Missed” was part of a set of poems selected as a finalist for the 2009 Pablo Neruda Prize in Poetry by the journal Nimrod (2009). In 2010, he won the Founder’s Circle Prize from Soundings Review.
CARROL FIRMAGE {cafirmage@xmission.com} teaches English at ITT Technical College in Salt Lake City. She recently (2009) received her master’s degree in environmental humanities at the University of Utah. This article, an excerpt from her thesis, is part of a larger study on the history of agriculture in Utah that she is pursuing in conjunction with her husband, Edwin Firmage Jr.

EDWIN FIRMAGE JR. {efirmage@xmission.com} is a fine art photographer in Salt Lake City. He studied classics at Princeton University and has a master’s degree in ancient history and Mediterranean archaeology from U.C. Berkeley where he was a Mellon Fellow. From 1986 to 1989, he was a Rotary Foundation scholar at Hebrew University, Jerusalem. He is the author and publisher of Red Rock Yellow Stone (Salt Lake City: Firmageditions, 2005), an award-winning combination of photographs of the American West and haiku from Japan. This article is adapted from an address presented at the Unitarian Church, Salt Lake City, December 18, 2009, which in turn draws from a much longer manuscript that details the evidence for climate change and specific steps that the LDS Church could take to address this problem. The remainder of the manuscript can be found in the blog section of www.edwinfirmage.com.

JOEY FRANKLIN {joey.franklin@gmail.com} is a doctoral fellow in English and creative writing at Texas Tech University. His work has appeared in The Florida Review and Brevity. His essay “Working at Wendy’s” was published as the grand prize-winning essay in Random House’s Twentysomething Essays by Twentysomething Writers Anthology contest for 2006.

CHRISTIAN HARRISON {christian.harrison@gmail.com} was born and raised in Spokane, Washington. He served a two-year mission in Montréal, Québec. Today, he’s a communications consultant in Salt Lake City. When he’s not fulfilling Church callings, working, or serving in various civic capacities, Christian can be found cooking for friends, catching a movie, or exploring the back roads of Utah.

BLAIR DEE HODGES {blairdhodges@gmail.com} earned a B.A. degree in mass communications with a minor in religious studies from the University of Utah in 2010. He presented an earlier version of his article at the 2009 conference of the Society for Mormon Philosophy and Theology Conference at Claremont University. He thanks W. V. Smith for assistance with some sources.

CHASE KIMBALL {chasekimball@gmail.com} is a recent graduate of Carleton College, a small liberal arts college in Northfield, Minnesota. Having earned a degree in economics, Chase also pursued his interests in political philosophy, religion, and theater. He returned from the Belgium Brussels/Netherlands Mission in 2007 and has served as elders’ quorum president and mission leader in his Young Single Adult branch. He is currently living in Washington, D.C., where he hopes, by the time of publication, to have found a paying job.

WILLIAM P. MACKINNON {MacKBP@msn.com} is an independent historian residing in Montecito, Santa Barbara County, California. His articles, essays, and letters about territorial Utah and Mormon history have appeared in Dialogue since 1987 as well as in more than thirty other journals, starting in 1963. MacKinnon is president of the Mormon History Association for 2011–12 and is editing the second volume of his two-part documentary history of the Utah War, At Sword’s Point (Norman: Arthur H. Clark Company, an imprint of the University of Oklahoma Press, forthcoming).

RYAN MCILVAIN {ryan.mcilvain@gmail.com} is a current Stegner Fellow in Fiction at Stanford University. His stories and essays have appeared in The Paris Review, The Potomac Review, The Chattahoochee Review, and other magazines. His short story “Keep It Bible” received an honorable mention in The Best American Short Stories 2009 and The Best American Nonrequired Reading 2009.

DIXIE PARTRIDGE’s {pearanttree@gmail.com} work has appeared in many anthologies and journals such as The Georgia Review, Poetry, Ploughshares, Commonweal, Midwest Quarterly, Nightsun, and Chariton Review. Her books are Deer in the Haystacks (Boise, Ida.: Ahsahta Press, 1984) and Watermark (Upper Montclair, N.J.: Saturday Press, 1991; winner of the Barnes Award). She is working on a fourth collection of poems and edits poetry for Sunstone Magazine. Partridge grew up on a western Wyoming farm homesteaded by her great-grandfather and lives with her husband near the Columbia River in Washington, where their six children grew, always savoring ties and excursions to the farm in Wyoming.

DALLAS ROBBINS {dallasrobbins@gmail.com} is a freelance writer living in Salt Lake City. He is a frequent contributor to Salt Lake City Weekly and Sunstone Magazine. Follow him at http://www.twitter.com/dallasrobbins.

JOSEPH M. SPENCER {stokiejoe@gmail.com} has spent the past year as an adjunct instructor of philosophy at Utah Valley University and is now pursuing further graduate work in philosophy. He is a former Joseph Smith Summer Seminar fellow and, along with scattered articles, has authored a forthcoming study of the Book of Mormon, An Other Testament: On Typology. He serves on the executive board of the Mormon Theology Seminar (http://mormontheologyseminar.org) and is book review editor for Element: The Journal of the Society for Mormon Philosophy and Theology. Joseph and his wife, Karen, have four children.

ROGER TERRY {rkt56@byu.edu} is senior associate editor at BYU Studies. He spent seven years as a senior editor at LDS Church Magazines and nine years on the faculty of BYU’s Marriott School. He has written five books, including God’s Executioner (Springville, Utah: Cedar Fort, 2005) and Economic Insanity: How Growth-Driven Capitalism Is Devouring the American Dream (San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler, 1995). He and his wife, Sheri, live in Orem, Utah, and have four children.