CONTRIBUTORS

RANDY ASTLE {randy@randyastle.com} is a New York City-based filmmaker, screenwriter, and Mormon film critic. He received his M.A. from the London Film School and currently works as a writer for children’s television. He is also writing a book on Mormon cinema and doing pre-production on a feature film and transmedia property entitled Saints. He created the LDS Filmmakers’ Network at www.ldsfilmmakersnetwork.com, his own website is http://www.randyastle.com, and he blogs about children’s media at http://redballoonblog.blogspot.com and Mormon film, including his own, at http://mormonfilm.net.

WILLIAM S. BRADSHAW is professor emeritus, Department of Microbiology and Molecular Biology, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah.

SAMUEL BROWN {smb@samuelbrown.net} is a medical researcher, intensive care physician, and cultural historian. An early version of this essay was presented as “Joseph Smith’s Death Conquest: Sacerdotal Genealogy and the Great Chain of Being,” at the 2006 American Academy of Religion meeting, Washington, D.C. This essay abstracts and expands material from In Heaven As It Is on Earth: Joseph Smith and the Early Mormon Conquest of Death (copyright Oxford University Press, 2011). ACKNOWLEDGMENTS: I thank Kathleen Flake, Glen M. Leonard, Jonathan A. Stapley, John G. Turner, and an anonymous Dialogue reviewer for their perceptive criticism of drafts of this essay.

BRENT CORCORAN {brent.corcoran@comcast.net} is production manager for Dialogue and compositor for the Journal of Mormon History.

RONAN JAMES HEAD {ronan.head@gmail.com} teaches religion and philosophy at a private school for boys in England. He holds degrees from the University of Birmingham, the University of Oxford, and the Johns Hopkins University. He writes for the Mormon blog By Common Consent and helps convene the European Mormon Studies Association.

MASSIMO INTROVIGNE (born in 1955 in Rome, Italy) is a Roman Catholic sociologist of religion. He is the founder and managing director of the Center for Studies on New Religions (CESNUR), a scholarly organisation that studies New Religious Movements (NRMs). He has written extensively on religion, including Mormonism. A list of his publications can be found at his web-site: http://www.cesnur.org/testi/introvigne_biblio.htm. A lawyer by profession, Introvigne works as a consultant on intellectual property rights.

TIMOTHY LIU {LiuT@wpunj.edu} is the author of eight books of poems, most recently Bending the Mind Around the Dream’s Blown Fuse (Jersey City, N.J.: Talisman House, 2009). He lives in Manhattan, New York City.

MYRNA DEE MARLER {myrna.marler@byuh.edu} is a professor of English at Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus. She teaches creative writing and young adult literature and has written for Dialogue, Sunstone, and other journals. Currently, she is working on a book of essays tentatively titled “Notes from the Trenches: Teaching in the College Composition and Literature Classroom.”

ADAM S. MILLER {adamscottmiller@gmail.com} is a professor of philosophy at Collin College in McKinney, Texas. He is the author of Badiou, Marion, and St. Paul: Immanent Grace (London: Continuum, 2008), the director of the Mormon Theology Seminar, and a managing editor at Salt Press (www. saltpress.org).

BOYD JAY PETERSEN {boyd.petersen@comcast.net} is program coordinator for Mormon studies at Utah Valley University in Orem, Utah. He and his wife, Zina, are the parents of one “emerging adult,” one teenager, and two teens-in-waiting.

LEVI S. PETERSON {althlevip@msn.com} is a retired professor of English at Weber State University, presently living in Issaquah, Washington, with his wife, Althea Sand Peterson. He is a former

ELISA PULIDO {epulido@aol.com} has published her poetry in, among other periodicals, River Styx, The Ledge, The North American Review, Margie, Another Chicago Magazine, The Tor House Newsletter, and RHINO in the United States and in Interchange and The New Welsh Review in the United Kingdom. In 2007, she was made an honorary member of Academi Cardiff, the national literary society of Wales. She is currently pursuing a doctoral degree in North American religions at Claremont Graduate University. She wrote “On the Murder of Five Amish Girls” shortly after that 2006 tragedy, attempting to address the sudden paradigm shift that occurs when loved ones die unexpectedly. About this poem, Pulido writes: “Even speech becomes difficult as the bereaved try to sort through whether to speak of the suddenly departed in the present, as has been their habit, or in the past. Such shocks also challenge assumptions about theodicy and eschatology, leaving believers to either question or reaffirm their views. The most difficult decision in the poem was whether to end it in the past or present tense. Ultimately, the Amish parents’ ability to forgive the perpetrator and his family led me to lay their grief to rest in the past tense by ending the poem with the word ‘blurred.’”

W. PAUL REEVE {paul.reeve@history.utah.edu} is associate professor of history at the University of Utah and associate chair of the History Department. He is the author of Making Space on the Western Frontier: Mormons, Miners, and Southern Paiutes (Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2006) and co-editor with Ardis E. Parshall of Mormonism: A Historical Encyclopedia (Santa Barbara, Calif.: ABC-CLIO, 2010). His current project, Religion of a Different Color: Race and the Mormon Struggle for Whiteness is under contract with Oxford University Press.

DAVID SALMANSON {dsalmanson@springside.org} teaches history at Springside School, an all-girls K–12 in Philadelphia. He abandoned a book project on the history of uranium mining in New Mexico. Like the ever-hopeful settlers of Blue Valley, he plans to return to it someday. In the meantime, he’s raising three children and, weather permitting, tomatoes.

RYAN SHOEMAKER’s {shoemakerryan@hotmail.com} fiction has appeared or is forthcoming in the The MacGuffin, Irreantum, Santa Monica Review, Natural Bridge, and Dialogue, where he won the 2008 Best in Fiction Award. Recently, Ryan received Second Prize in the 2010 USC Edward W. Moses Graduate Creative Writing Competition. He is a Ph.D. candidate in creative writing and literature at the University of Southern California and lives in Burbank with his wife, Jennifer, and children, Kieran and Haven. Ryan thanks T. C. Boyle, whose short story “The Hit Man” inspired the form of “Richard Golightly: A Novel.”

JULIE M. SMITH has a graduate degree in biblical studies from the Graduate Theological Union in Berkeley, California. She lives near Austin, Texas, where she is a homeschooler, writer, and sometimes LDS Institute of Religion teacher. She is the author of Search, Ponder, and Pray: A Guide to the Gospels (N.p.: iUniverse, 2003).

KATHRYN LYNARD SOPER {kathrynsoper@gmail.com} is the

PAUL SWENSON {paulswenson@comcast.net} has published Iced at the Ward/Burned at the Stake, and Other Poems (Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 2003), with his second collection forthcoming: In Sleep, & Other Poems (Salt Lake City: Dream Garden Press, 2011).

ALAN MICHAEL WILLIAMS {alan@amwilliams.com} has an M.A. in cultural studies from the University of Washington Bothell. He is the author of a self-published gay Mormon novel titled Ockham’s Razor (2009). He expresses thanks to Bruce Burgett, Kristine Haglund, Susan Harewood, Melissa Wilcox, and others along the way for their readings and thoughts on earlier drafts of this essay.