DIALOGUE

a journal of mormon thought

The Dialogue Board of Trustees announces a new award for the best article published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought written by a woman scholar. The award is named in recognition of pioneering women in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries whose thoughtful writing gave voice to Latter-day Saint women. In the nineteenth century, Louisa Lula Greene, Emmeline B. Wells and their associates published women's expressions on politics, religion, culture, family and faith and were in the forefront of issues relating to women's equality both in Utah Territory and in the nation. Exponent II has continued the legacy of its nineteenth century sister publication and inspired scholars to engage in research and writing on the Mormon experience, broadening and enriching the conversation about Mormonism in general and the role of women in Mormon culture in particular. The future of Mormonism will be greatly enriched by more research, scholarship and publishing by and about women. Dialogue is especially interested in encouraging younger women scholars to use their skills and talents to broaden the understanding of Mormonism as it continues to expand its influence in the world. The award, which carries a prize of $500, will be announced in Dialogue in 2015 and the first award will be given during Dialogue's jubilee year, 2016.
